These two awards recognize outstanding contributions to entomology across different stages of a professional career. The Certificate of Distinction recognizes sustained, career-long achievements and outstanding contributions to entomology with lasting scientific, educational, professional, or societal impact. Nominees should normally have received their Ph.D. or equivalent doctoral degree at least 25 years before the nomination deadline, or have accumulated at least 25 years of professional experience in entomology following completion of their highest academic qualification. The Certificate of Excellence recognizes exceptional achievement during the early stages of a professional career and outstanding promise for continued leadership and innovation in entomology. Nominees should normally have received their Ph.D. or equivalent doctoral degree within the previous 15 years, or have less than 15 years of professional experience in entomology following completion of their highest academic qualification. The awards recognize significant contributions in areas including entomological research, education, leadership, professional service, international collaboration, conservation, and applied entomology. National and regional entomological societies formally invited by the Council for International Congresses of Entomology are eligible to submit nominations. Self-nominations are not accepted. A completed nomination package should include: 1. A completed Nomination Form indicating the award category and providing the contact information of the nominator, nominee, and four seconders; 2. A nomination statement of no more than one page summarizing the nominee's outstanding achievements and explaining why the nominee merits the selected award; and 3. A curriculum vitae of no more than two pages.
